“Tunas Nusantara”

Abstract:

Education is the initial capital for the development of the nation. Aside from being a capital, education in this technological age is a necessity. Judging from various aspects, good quality education can be used as a benchmark of the progress of a country. The presence of education, is expected to form the character of a country and the creation of human resources helpful. Bandung is one of the largest cities in Indonesia. School is a space provided by the government for the application of education, so it is important to improve the quality of facilities and pre-school facilities. Television is a medium of communication in one direction that is highly digestible and understood by all people. Televisions are considered quite effective in spreading the message widely. Tunas Nusantara is a program that will provide information about the condition of education in Indonesia through the perspective of a student. Selected students are expected to describe and tell the school, both in terms of facilities, environmental, until the people involved. The focus of this program is as a critic of both the government or the people within the world of education in Indonesia. The program is packed with documentary format with the docudrama genre and uses language that is lightweight, Indonesian daily. By using DSLR cameras, this program will be packaged and delivered briefly through a documentary TV program titled Tunas archipelago.
