

ABSTRACT

Mental health is still one of the significant health problems in the world, including in Indonesia. Depression is a mental disorder that can be cured, but in the midst of society, people who experience depression are still often misunderstood and stigmatized. Lack of education about mental health is one of the causes of stigma and misunderstanding in society. Depression in adolescents that are not treated appropriately and just ignored can potentially be a severe mental disorder and lead to suicidal thoughts. In this modern era, information media is easily available. One of the alternative media which can attract attention is a motion graphic. The methods used for collecting data to design the motion graphic are observation, interview, literature, and questionnaire. The result of this motion graphic reaches a conclusion that how a motion graphic can be made to educate the public, especially adolescents, about the mental health problem and how to deal with appropriate depression disorder.
