

ABSTRACT

Sexual education is a discussion that is considered taboo for most circles in Indonesia. Many cases such as sexual deviations to sexual violence are feared to endanger children. It takes a commitment from parents to provide sexual education from an early age appropriately so that children are able to protect themselves. This interactive book is made with the aim that children aged 4-6 years can get appropriate sexual education, and easy to understand. In designing this book, the author uses a qualitative method by surveying RA Bahrul Ilmi, a questionnaire to parents who have children 4-6 years in the city of Bandung and literature study. → Conduct interviews with child psychologists, story books and child illustration experts, as well as children's library librarians. Then analyze the strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats through SWOT. The author hopes that this design can add insight into how to provide sexual education early on, and can help break the notion that education about sex is taboo.
