

ABSTRACT

Indonesia is a democratic country in the form of a political government with full power from the people. The election of the people's representative/President in a democratic country is carried out through general elections (elections), where the people or citizens who directly elect representatives of the people use voting (voting). In the implementation of the election, fraud often occurs in various forms. Online media is one of the media that is fast or aggressive in reporting the issue, easy access and the speed of technology make the news continue to be updated quickly every day. One of the media that reported on the issue was Tempo.co and Kompas.com. This research is qualitative research with framing analysis approach of Zhongdang Pan and Gerald M. Kosicki model using media reality construction theory. The objects in this study are news related to the 2019 presidential election fraud issue in the media Tempo.co and Kompas.com which were taken in the March-April 2019 period adjusted to the widespread news regarding the 2019 presidential election. by using simple language which is usually seen in the titles presented, other than that, different news contents were found with the titles raised, but in the Kompas.com media the framing of news is simple but enough to attract the interest of readers, it can be seen in the titles presented. The different point of view of each media is of particular interest to its readers, the Tempo.co media which has a more view of the parties concerned with the 2019 presidential election fraud issue, while the Kompas.com media is more directed to the main parties who submit reports of presidential election fraud to other related parties.

Keywords: construction, online media, news, presidential election fraud, framing analysis