ABSTRACT

The development of information and communication technology from day to day is increasing and continues to expand widely ranging from urban areas to remote rural areas. The world of information and communication technology offers and provides a lot of convenience in helping to expedite all human activities in all fields, including agriculture. DFarmer is an application for selling agricultural products to make it easier for farmers and partners to distribute and sell agricultural products throughout regions that are very easy to reach to areas that are experiencing difficulties.

Keywords: agricultural applications, web, technology.