

ABSTRACT

The South Sulawesi public library is a regional public library under the management of the South Sulawesi Library and Archives Service (DPK) and is the central library in South Sulawesi which has an important role as a source of information and accommodates educational needs in the community. The challenges faced by libraries are the low level of public interest in reading and the rapid development of information and communication technology. This redesign aims to optimize and maximize the use and distribution of space in the library in accordance with the needs of the digital native community, which is the dominant generation in the development of technology and information. The methodology used in this design is to collect data through observation, interviews and literature. Through this design, it is hoped that it can provide a solution to the problem of utilization and grouping of space in the interior of the library and can accommodate the needs of information technology for library users in South Sulawesi Province.
