Orphanages are institutions that play an important role in serving children's rights, especially for orphans, neglected children and children from underprivileged families. Orphanages are seen as capable of providing care, emotional guidance, caring, support for education, as well as support for healthy development, if implemented properly (Voekl, 2012). The Puteri William Booth Orphanage is one of the social services in Indonesia specifically for girls whose address is Jalan Jawa Number 18, Bandung. The Puteri William Booth Orphanage was inaugurated on September 24, 1917 by a Dutch Methodist Church Pastor and he called it the Salvation Army. The purpose of the interior design of this children's orphanage was to support the creation of social welfare institutions with facilities according to standards, meeting the needs of children foster care in shaping children's physical, mental and social development, as well as providing a sense of safe, comfort and fun. The theme applied in order to achieve this goal is "Blissful Space" which aims to create a safe, comfortable, and enjoyable space for the preparation of foster children to have a good and worthy future in terms of knowledge, ability, and religion.
