

ABSTRACT

The documentary film "A Journey into Jakarta's Food Waste Crisis" is a piece of work that addresses the issue of food waste in Jakarta, one of the largest cities in Indonesia significantly affected by this problem. The aim of this film is to enhance literacy about the issue of food waste among students pursuing their studies in Jakarta. Additionally, the film also aims to motivate them to take tangible steps in reducing food waste in their daily lives. The methods used in creating this film include interviews with the founder of BeriTahu, a social-educational platform aimed at addressing hunger issues in Indonesia. Moreover, four students from various campuses in Jakarta were also interviewed to gain diverse perspectives on the issue of food waste. To support these efforts, literature review and observation were conducted to achieve comprehensive outcomes. The ultimate narrative in this documentary has been deliberately structured and made coherent for the student audience. The film is supplemented with relevant data, statistics, and an emphasis on captivating visual and audio aspects to enhance the effectiveness of message delivery. It is hoped that this film will serve as a reference for future researchers interested in similar issues.
