

ABSTRACT

This artwork seeks to highlight the importance of performing worship with awareness and sincerity. This work is realized through Mixed Media Surrealist Photography, depicting how the improper application of religious education by families can impact children's understanding of worship. In some cases, inappropriate parenting in teaching religion can affect the emotional relationship between the child and the parents and shape a perception of worship that is not based on deep understanding. The visual in surreal photography convey meanings related to the child's emotional experiences, as well as augmented reality animations to create an interactive experience that strengthens the narrative of work. The methods applied include literature review, visual experiments, and exploration of the physical form of the work to find the most suitable techniques and media in depicting the raised concept. The combination of surreal photography and augmented reality animation can provide a strong visual representation of the impact of religious education applied by parents to their children. Through this approach, the work can serve as a means of reflection for society on the importance of teaching religion in a more wise manner, so that children can perform worship with awareness and sincerity.
